

HOW SAFE ARE VACCINES?

Most people who vaccinate their children do not realise the kind of ingredients contained in vaccines - even if they do know, they may not fully understand what that particular ingredient does or what it means.

This is to help those individuals better understand what they are injecting into the bodies of their loved ones.

Mercury

Mercury is 500 times more toxic than lead and is second only to Plutonium as the most toxic metal known to man. Injected mercury is different than ingested mercury. Tiny doses cause damage to the brain, gut, liver, bone marrow, nervous system and/or kidneys. Linked to autoimmune disorders, and neurological disorders like autism. In addition, mercury is a known carcinogen. Many people have mercury amalgam fillings, complicating matters by creating a build up of mercury in the body. There are NO safe amounts of mercury established for humans. For many years children received 237 micrograms (mcg) of mercury in vaccines during their first two years of life. Not one study exists showing it's safe to inject mercury into humans.

Aluminium

Aluminium is a heavy metal that is neurotoxic and there is evidence that aluminium in vaccines can cause brain and immune system dysfunction and that some people may be genetically more susceptible to being harmed by aluminium adjuvants in vaccines. The American Academy of Pediatrics confirms aluminium affects the body negatively. Repeated exposure to aluminium can have damaging effects. If following the recommended schedule of the CDC, a child gets injected every couple of months with more aluminium. Studies with mice demonstrate a transient rise in aluminium levels in brain tissue. This means aluminium builds up in the brain and potentially other organs. Aluminium is widely associated with breast cancer. More recent research shows a link between aluminium and Alzheimer's Disease.

Animal Organ Tissue & Blood

Vaccine manufacturers have long used cell material from mammals to make vaccines now in use or to make experimental vaccines. There is an inherent risk of contamination with viruses and other microbes (or DNA from those microbes) that can escape detection during the vaccine development, testing, licensing, manufacturing and oversight process. Vaccines can contain pig blood, horse blood, rabbit brains, dog kidneys, cow hearts, monkey kidneys, chick embryos, calf serum, sheep blood and more, linked to childhood leukemia and diabetes.

Formaldehyde

Formaldehyde is added to vaccines to kill unwanted bacteria and viruses that might

Aborted Foetal Tissue

A number of vaccines—including varicella, rubella, hepatitis A, shingles, and rabies - are made using foetal embryo cells, and have been for decades. The reason given is that the viruses tend to grow better in these cells, and foetal cells can divide for a long time before dying. However, the use of actual human foetal cells poses the question of how the foetal DNA will interact with the virus and, eventually, the human into which it is injected. It remains unclear what kind of dangerous immune response this has been provoking, but according to the Sound Choice Pharmaceutical Institute, a biomedical research organisation, there have been distinct spikes in autism rates in the years when vaccines grown in human foetal cells were introduced. In my opinion, the moral implications here are huge.

Squalene

The World Health Organization (WHO) describes squalene as “a component of some adjuvants that is added to vaccines to enhance the immune response.” The WHO notes that most people who have received squalene-containing vaccines are in older age groups, and that we don't really know how this component might impact younger people. A 2000 study found that a single injection of squalene adjuvant produced arthritis in rats, and many believe squalene-containing anthrax vaccine to be the main culprit in triggering Gulf War Syndrome among American troops who served in the Persian Gulf War in the early 1990s.

Polysorbate 80

A preservative used in vaccines called Polysorbate 80 is so toxic that it should never touch your skin or be ingested. Studies with lab rats show this preservative has both carcinogenic and infertility effects. Yet this known carcinogenic ingredient is found both in Merck's cancer vaccine, Gardasil, and also used in chemotherapy given to cancer patients. The safety of using this chemical in vaccines has been poorly studied, and according to the Material Safety Data Sheet (MSDS) for Polysorbate 80, it may cause adverse reproductive effects and cancer based on animal testing data. The MSDS also indicates that no safety testing has been done in humans.

Monosodium Glutamate (MSG)

More commonly known as a food additive, MSG is also used as a stabilizer to help contaminate the vaccine during production. The CDC insists most formaldehyde is removed from the vaccine before it is packaged, which is just another way of saying that all of it is not removed. Formaldehyde is a human carcinogen according to the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences. Probable gastrointestinal, liver, respiratory, immune, nerve and reproductive system poison. Banned from injectables in most European countries.

vaccines remain unchanged when exposed to heat, light, acidity or humidity, according to the CDC. MSG consumption is notorious for causing headaches in some people. It can also cause fatigue, disorientation and heart palpitation, per the Mayo Clinic. MSG has been called an "excitotoxin," which is a term used to describe a class of chemicals (usually amino acids) that over-stimulate neuron receptors in the brain, causing them to die.

According to Helen Ratajczak, former senior scientist at a pharmaceutical firm, there is a link to brain damage and human DNA in vaccines. DNA in vaccines is taken up by human cells and recombined into our genome.

Today's vaccines contain GMOs, hormones from infected cows, pigs, chickens and monkeys, untested virus combinations (like H1N1), aluminum, mercury, emulsifiers, and crossbred bacteria from animals, mosquitoes, and diseased humans:

Measles Live Virus Vaccine: (Attenuvax) Made by Merck. Two injections are given; one at 1 year and another at 4 years old. Contains gelatin, sorbitol, sodium chloride, bovine cow serum, egg protein and human albumin.

Measles and Mumps Live Virus Vaccine: (M-M-Rvax) Made by Merck. Injected into one year old babies. Contains gelatin, sorbitol, sodium chloride, bovine cow serum and human albumin.

Preventers & Promoters Of Respiratory Diseases

How do prophylactics prevent disease and can you really catch covid-19 from 5G?

Prophylactics are either synthetic medicines, or medicinal plants, Omega 3 oils, probiotics and vitamins, likely to prevent people from contracting disease; they can also help to reduce disease severity. The emergence of severe acute respiratory syndrome coronavirus 2 (SARS-CoV-2) is postulated to be responsible for covid-19 disease, and much discussion has surrounded the use of prophylactics in its prevention. Can this disease really be prevented? Evidence suggests it can.

Ivermectin and hydroxychloroquine are synthetically-created medicines; both are celebrated anti-parasitic drugs with well-documented safety profiles and proven, highly potent, antiviral and anti-inflammatory properties. They are inexpensive and feature on the WHO list of essential medicines. Anti-viral pharmaceutical prophylactics have been used for decades to prevent and reduce disease severity. Whilst the U.S. FDA and UK MHRA have not yet approved ivermectin and hydroxychloroquine for prevention of, or treatment of covid-19 disease, studies suggest the individual use of these medicines may prevent and reduce disease severity. There are also a number of medical plants with anti-viral and anti-inflammatory properties in medical trials that almost match the effectiveness of their synthetic alternatives. Quercetin and quinine are two powerful natural alternatives. Vitamin D is also a celebrated prophylactic, well-known for preventing respiratory tract infections.

Promoters of disease are chemicals or environmental contaminants which may encourage serious illness. It has been postulated that 5G spreads covid-19. How can this possibly be? It sounds a ridiculous notion. So, let us discuss, disease preventers and promoters in a clear and simple way:

Vitamin D

People with higher baseline vitamin D are 60% less likely to die of covid-19, therefore it makes perfect sense to follow NHS advice and supplement with up to 4000 International Units (IU) per day. This is an easy way of reducing the likelihood of contracting respiratory tract disease and of reducing its severity (Martineau 2017). And this makes it the super-hero in the fight against covid-19 disease. In a Spanish study, supplemental vitamin D3 reduced covid-19, ICU admissions by 82% and mortality by 64%. Many enthusiasts have been lobbying the UK government since early March 2020, calling for vitamin D supplementation for all, especially the most vulnerable, known to suffer innate vitamin D deficiency: black and ethnic minorities, older people, diabetics and those with obesity conditions. Reduction in deaths in Europe correlate with latitude, sun exposure and corresponding vitamin D levels, as in the Far East, where Cambodia and Laos have suffered only a handful of deaths. Vitamin D influences regulatory T-cell responses, essential for defence against bacterial infections. Optimising vitamin D absorption with a synergistic blend of magnesium and vitamin K2 increases vitamin D uptake. Also, when you are insulin sensitive and eating a low-carb diet, you produce healthy ketone levels, which help inhibit cytokine hyper-inflammation, a primary cause of covid-19 deaths.

using zinc to inhibit viral replication.

Ivermectin

Evidence suggests Ivermectin can be useful at all stages of covid-19, especially as a prophylactic. In August 2020, Uttar Pradesh and Bihar distributed free Ivermectin and by the end of 2020, both states had the lowest death rates in India. A WHO-sponsored review suggests Ivermectin can reduce deaths by 83%. Dr. Andrew Hill of Liverpool University, describes Ivermectin as a potentially transformative treatment. In the U.S., Dr. Pierre Kory of the Covid-19 Critical Care Alliance suggests clinical studies show a large magnitude of benefits with Ivermectin, both as a prophylactic and treatment of all phases of covid-19 and keeps those with early symptoms from cytokine hyper-inflammation. While Ivermectin certainly appears to be useful, optimising your vitamin D levels should be your primary strategy.

Hydroxychloroquine:

Hydroxychloroquine helps shuttle zinc into human cells to block SARS-CoV-2 RNA-dependent RNA polymerase (the enzyme required for viral replication). Many doctors worldwide have reported great success with hydroxychloroquine and zinc in combined use, as a prophylactic. A medical review in the January 2021 issue of The American Journal of Medicine suggests, use of hydroxychloroquine and zinc reduced hospital entry. July 23, 2020, Dr. Harvey A. Risch, professor of epidemiology at Yale, suggested, the primary benefit of hydroxychloroquine comes from zinc, which inhibits viral replication.

Promoters of Disease

The connection between covid-19 and 5G is inconclusive. One theory suggests that 5G has promoted the emergence of covid-19. In Dr. Arthur Firstenberg's book, 'The Invisible Rainbow', a claim is made that as the world has become electrified, viral pandemics have followed, and suggests a correlation between the 1918 Spanish flu pandemic and roll-out of the first radio telegraphs. Dr. Thomas Cowan suggests 5G produces EMF-induced cellular toxicity. Poor immune function, possibly caused by EMF in those with electro-sensitivity, combined with unhealthy living, may have enhanced infection. Two of the areas hardest hit by covid-19, Wuhan and Northern Italy, implemented 5G just before their outbreaks; perhaps lowering natural immune defence and promoting chronic inflammation; although those who died, mostly were older people with obesity and diabetes, with insulin resistance being the common factor. High blood sugar will create an open back-door osmosis opportunity, for viral entry into cells. Any correlation with 5G may be a red herring, hiding apparent innate vitamin D deficiency; and in the UK, a reported incident where a married couple ended up seriously hyper-inflamed with covid-19, two weeks after receiving their flu vaccine, like 5G, could be coincidental, but should be given our careful consideration.

Debunking Smallpox: Vaccine Delusion?

by LOUIZE SMALL

We have grown up believing that smallpox is highly contagious, indiscriminate and deadly: that it killed many millions worldwide and that we were only saved from its ghastly ravages by the development of vaccinations; but this is simply not true and quite possibly the result of modern medical propaganda.

Vaccines didn't eradicate smallpox, they made it worse; it was already on the decline by the time vaccines were introduced in 1796 but then it began to rise again. The disease was at its peak during the 1700s, though it was often confused with other illnesses such as chicken pox, measles, shingles, scarlet fever and secondary syphilis.

In modern times, it is a somewhat mythical disease but in days gone by it was a lethal, everyday scourge that you were lucky to avoid. Anxiously accepted as a part of life, some chose to purposefully infect themselves to get it over with. This 'arm-to-arm' (or up the nose) transfer was called variolation and involved matter from an infected pustule being pricked into the skin of the recipient. It was a risky procedure because there was always a chance of catching some other hideous disease or dying.

In 1796, historical 'golden boy' Edward Jenner began experimenting on cows after hearing about a local farmer who had apparently gained smallpox immunity by inoculating himself with cowpox secretions. Jenner hypothesised that because cows didn't carry the same transmissible diseases as humans they would be safer to use as hosts. He swiftly began trialling the method.

James Phipps was one of the first to be immunised by Jenner as a young child; by the time he died he had been vaccinated over 20 times. He was 20. Jenner also tested the vaccine on his own son, who became crippled and died at 21. Both men died of tuberculosis, which some researchers attribute to the smallpox vaccine. (Eleanor McBean, The Poisoned Needle).

Though he was a keen pupil of esteemed surgeon John Hunter, Jenner sat no examinations and purchased a £15 medical degree from St. Andrew's University only after he had been practising for twenty years. His opponents considered him vain, petulant, crafty and greedy – 'a self-deluded quack who omitted vital information and denounced his findings only to reassert them when it suited him.' Nevertheless, he somehow managed to convince those in the right places and received a £30,000 grant from parliament (roughly £3 million by today's standards) to continue his work.

Through fierce, persistent and active opposition, parliament eventually passed an act in 1898 that removed penalties and allowed parents to choose whether to have their children vaccinated.

The Vaccination Act of 1853 made it compulsory for all babies under the age of three months to be vaccinated in England. Before this, the two-year death rate from the disease was 2,000, whereas 18 years later, during the pandemic of 1871, it had reached 44,800. It is estimated that 90% of those who fell ill had been vaccinated.

Opposition grew towards vaccination as the situation got worse, not better. Anti-vaccination leagues and societies formed throughout the country with dedicated high-profile members. Local guardians defended the rights of citizens and communities stood together to fight government tyranny. Protests took place and teams produced pamphlets and flyers with titles such as: 'Vaccination: its fallacies and evils', 'Vaccination, a Curse' and 'Horrors of Vaccination'.

Huge numbers of people across the land worried that the vaccine was unsafe and unproven. Parents were fined and thrown in prison for not immunising their children but their commitment to the cause didn't waver. Through fierce, persistent and active opposition, parliament eventually passed an act in 1898 that removed penalties and allowed parents to choose whether to have their children vaccinated.

Alfred Russell Wallace, a naturalist and biologist, charted European deaths from smallpox and the vaccine and reported that: "the vaccine has actually increased susceptibility to the disease. The conclusion is in every case the same: that vaccination is a gigantic delusion; that it has never saved a single life; but that it has been the cause of so much disease, so many deaths, such a vast amount of utterly needless and altogether undeserved suffering, that it will be classed by the coming generation among the greatest errors of an ignorant and prejudiced age, and its penal enforcement the foulest blot on the generally beneficent course of legislation during our century."

The real problem with smallpox was filth and lack of hygiene. Sir Edwin Chadwick, a social reformer, toured populous working class areas of England and produced the 1842 Sanitary Report, which compelled the councils to provide better facilities. He said: "Smallpox, typhus, and other fevers occur in common conditions of foul air, stagnant putrefaction, bad house drainage, sewers of deposit, excrement sodden sites, filthy street surfaces, impure water, and overcrowding, and the entire removal of such conditions is the effectual preventive of diseases."

The construction of London's sewers, which had begun in 1766, was completed by the mid-1860s and sanitation throughout the country, along with health, slowly improved with the introduction of the Public Health Act in 1875, which laid out detailed plans for more effective drainage, clearance of waste and rubbish, and regular maintenance of sewers.

Natural hygienist and physician, Dr. Russell T. Trall, considered smallpox "essentially...not a dangerous disease" and Joel Uritsky, MD, director of the National Immunization Program and Early Smallpox Response and Planning at the CDC stated more recently that "Smallpox has a slow transmission and is not highly contagious."

H Valentine Knaggs, a physician and naturopath, somewhat radically claimed that smallpox was a beneficent disease, a healing crisis. He said: "The body is ridding itself of toxins. Medical intervention interferes with the process. Smallpox is an outbreak of carbuncles, simultaneously, all over the body. In a natural world, those who survived would be healthy, full of vitality and have great immunity from future disease."

Dr Vivian Vetrano, in her essay on smallpox, writes: "If hygienic care had been resorted to in the beginning of smallpox...no complications would have occurred and there would rarely be a genuine pustule." But way back when, patients were kept in bed, in warm rooms with dirty blankets and closed windows. Doctors applied gauze that had been soaked in corrosive mercuric chloride or carbolic acid and tightly bound the dressings; white blood cells were destroyed, the pus couldn't escape, toxicity increased and a second fever followed.

It would seem that medical intervention did not eradicate the disease but rather aggravated it. A doctor at the time remarked: "As it is palpable to all the world how fatal smallpox proves to many of all ages, so it is clear to me from all the observations that I can possibly make, that if no mischief be done, either by physician or nurse, it is the most safe and slight of all diseases."

For further information, read: 'Sanitation Vs. Vaccination - The Origin of Smallpox' by Walter S. Hadwen, M.D. or Dr. Sherri Tenpenny's 'Report of the CDC's Public Forum on Smallpox' at vaclub.org (8th June 2002).
